PREFACE

THE main lines of this work were laid down by the present writer more than thirty years ago. Part I, embracing all recoverable names from the earliest times to 1751, appeared in four volumes between the years 1921 and 1927; it had been sustained during the war period by the devoted labours of the late John Venn, Sc.D., F.R.S.—filius patri gratias agit. Then it was naturally felt that the chances of the Second Part being actively continued must primarily rest on the support accorded to its precursor. Almost at once, however, the Syndics of the Press most generously made financially possible the resumption of work on admissions from 1752 to 1900: and now, after a further twelve years' preparation, there are grounds for hoping that, despite the recurrence of war which must inevitably affect every aspect of book-production, the six resultant volumes will be published at intervals of a year or so. Each of these will be half as large again as those of Part I, for they have on an average only twenty entries per page as compared with forty-three to thirty-six in the first series—in other words, these 64,000 biographies of more recent members of the University contain almost twice as much information as was obtainable about their predecessors.

The successful outcome of the original project, representing a production second in magnitude only to that of the Dictionary of National Biography, is, as indicated above, due to the Syndics, who have continuously afforded it every form of material and pecuniary support. Few compilers of such commercially unremunerative works can have found themselves in so enviable a position, for Alumni Cantabrigienses is a personal venture and not an official publication of the University. In such fortunate circumstances, the writer's own efforts and those of his staff have been the more wholeheartedly directed towards making the results as complete as is humanly possible; the former can, indeed, claim to have read all the entries, numbering 140,000, twice—first in typescript and then again in proof—whilst the laborious extraction and checking of the millions of facts and dates has never deterred his assistants from maintaining the very high standard originally set.

In this latter connection it must be at once recorded that a terribly heavy blow was sustained by the unexpected death, in May 1939, of Miss F. W. S. Bloxham, principal Assistant since 1915. In the course of those twenty-four years she had proved herself to be one of the outstanding genealogists of her time, and it is no exaggeration to state that, without her highly skilled supervision, her uncanny accuracy and rigid devotion to detail, the Alumni would have emerged upon a much lower plane. Fortunately it has been possible to find a worthy successor in the person of an old friend, Mr E. A. B. Barnard, F.S.A., F.R.Hist.S., St Catharine's College, who has placed at its disposal his long-proved knowledge and experience in the fields of antiquarian and biographical research. There has thus been no serious break in the orderly progress of compilation.

In view of the totally different nature of the original records now involved, it seems supererogatory either to repeat any account of the University and College archives in general, or to labour the difficulties inherent in the preparatory stages of such a work as this. Readers desirous of information concerning the former will find in the Preface to Part I a very full description of the nature and condition of all those University documents, by the combined utilisation of which it should be theoretically possible to keep trace of each student's academic career, as well as of the individual admission registers and other College records. One or two additional matters seem, however, to call for explanation here.

The first is that now, fortunately, lists of matriculants, or even of graduates, on rare occasions supplemented by admission-book data, no longer represent the original basis upon which to build the superstructure of a student's Cambridge career, for the procedure has, in effect, been reversed, and College registers supply, in varying degrees of fullness, information as to parentage, birth-place, age and school, while the University matriculation register forms no more than a useful check upon, for example, migrations and the spelling or sequence of Christian names. Evidence goes to show, however, that a disconcertingly high proportion of mis-statements is to be found even in recent College admission books. This is especially marked in relation to the addresses of parents, and, to a lesser degree, affects dates of birth and places of education. Subsequent correspondence has revealed that, all too often, the most frequent explanation is that, while the original application for admission emanated from one address, by the time the entrant had come into residence his parents had removed elsewhere. Again, an arbitrary decision, perhaps hastily communicated by a nervous freshman to a busy clerk or College officer, may have determined, for all time, not only the selection of one from several schools attended, but could reverse the chronological sequence of his educational opportunities. Many youths clearly found difficulty (as witness the divergent views of several brothers) in describing with accuracy their father's profession or even in validating the year of their own birth. These explanations must be borne in mind by all those who discover what they might otherwise regard as evidence of careless transcription by ourselves from such published or manuscript sources. A further point to be stressed is that all biographical statements culled from extraneous authorities, which are either additional to, or corrective of, those given in admission books, have now been enclosed within square brackets, thus obviating any risk of ambiguity as to their origin. Although the spelling of their surnames by individuals had by 1752 become almost rigid, variations were, nevertheless, noted for at least another generation, and here again the matriculation books have had to be freely consulted—many thousands of signatures being checked. In Part I, as explained above, even after matriculation had been instituted in 1544, quite a considerable proportion of entries officially commenced with the conferment of a degree: now, fortunately, with the exception of "Ten-Year" men who could defer the obligation to matriculate until proceeding B.D. under the Elizabethan Statute, recipients honoris causa (always easily distinguishable) and incorporands from other Universities, the consequential, and often hazardous, identifications have no longer to be faced.

Those great handicaps represented by the ambiguity attaching to the holders of similar surnames, the absence of more than one Christian name and, above all, the numerous inaccuracies and lacunae described in the Preface to Part I, are now things of the past. Consequently it is far easier to assign with complete certainty not only intra-University careers, but also to attach events and happenings to post-academic lives without the constant use of expressions ranging in degree of certitude from "one of these names", through "possibly" and "probably", to "doubtless". One obvious result of this change in the nature of the material involved is that the proportion of entrants whose subsequent history cannot be traced has been reduced to the very low order of about four or five per cent.

Advantage has been taken of the stabilisation of surnames to substitute, in conformity with present-day practice, a strictly lexicographical sequence for the former grouping of all variants under one principal form. Furthermore, the use of double notation has, owing to the introduction in 1752 of the New Style, or Calendar, been completely eliminated from these volumes: this, in fact, was one of the reasons which determined the chronological division of the whole work, for, until comparatively recent times, the majority of B.A. degrees were conferred between January 1st and March 25th. Among other new features will be observed the following. The recording of First Classes gained in Tripos Examinations and awards of University prizes; Presidency of the Union is also noted, as are all "Blues" that had been fully recognised up to the end of the period, so that rowing, cricket, football (under both codes), and the sports are thus included. Details of marriage are, in general, provided up to the year 1850. Service in the war of 1914–18, as described in the official University War List, is invariably given. In the case of living persons the latest known address is appended to each record, reliance being placed, apart from Who's Who, Crockford and other such works, upon the University Parliamentary Register or the separate College lists: the location of beneficed clergy is indicated by the insertion of a hyphen after the last ascertainable date of tenure for each particular incumbency, and such other professions as those of the law and medicine are, wherever possible, similarly treated.

Although a very large number of fresh registers, histories and works of reference has been drawn upon, it does not seem necessary to repeat a long bibliography of published authorities such as appeared in Part I, for every entry concludes with a full list of the sources utilised, the titles of which must be familiar to most readers. Exceptionally, however, reference must at this point be made to one outstanding authority, for, although obituaries taken from The Times have, in every instance, been acknowledged, it must most gratefully be placed on record what a mass of accurate information has thus been collectively derived. Nor is a glossary of technical terms and expressions included, for the mediaeval atmosphere in which degrees "ad Baptistam" or "per lit. reg." were of common occurrence has disappeared, appeal has no longer to be made to "Praelector's lists" or to "supplicats", no candidates presented themselves as "impubes" or as "famuli", no "ordo senioritatis" called for inspection, nor have references to Grace-books "A", "B", "Γ" and "Δ" been demanded. The Hostels, too, had disappeared centuries before this section takes up the story, and their few successors of the late nineteenth century adopted self-explanatory titles. Uniformity, indeed, has extended to students as well as to institutions and courses of study, for the appearances of Research and Affiliated Students were few in number before 1900, whilst State Scholars, seconded members of the fighting Services and Colonial Probationers were as yet unknown in Cambridge.

Criticisms of both the educational and the national status of the University during the second half of the eighteenth century, supported as they have been by widely-drawn evidence of a moral and social, superimposed upon a numerical, decline, fortunately cannot be extended to embrace also the condition of its archives, for this period was not debased, as were others in previous centuries, by any deterioration in the standards maintained by the successive University Registraries and the officers of most Colleges. Certain lapses in quite recent times by the latter have, however, caused difficulties: at Queens', for example, the admission-register was discontinued between 1870 and 1886, and elsewhere one or two original records known to exist a few decades ago have now been lost. It can be stated, therefore, with thankfulness that the initial stages of this section of the work were not unduly prolonged by the exiguous nature of the material available, nor rendered more difficult by neglect on the part of the responsible custodians.

Many, alas, of those who assisted so greatly in the preparation of the earlier Part have since closed their last day—amongst them being the Rev. A. B. Beaven, the Rev. T. C. Dale, Mr F. S. Hockaday, the Rev. A. Leedes Hunt, Colonel J. Parker, C.B., Mr M. H. Peacock, Mr J. Challenor Smith, Mr H. M. Wood and the Very Rev. H. B. Swanzy, Dean of Dromore. Others of that original band of helpers are fortunately still with us, and Part II, indeed, owes more than can be expressed to the renewed labours of Mr Ernest Axon, the Rev. H. I. Longden, F.S.A., Mr C. R. Hudleston, and Mr P. E. Towell, each of whom has read through every entry, adding numerous notes from information in his possession. Mr Roland Austin, F.S.A., of Gloucester, has been most helpful in checking the voluminous Hockaday manuscripts and Mr W. T. J. Gun has performed similar functions in connection with the Harrow School Register, whilst Mr R. L. Lloyd, of the Treasurer's Office at the Inner Temple, has given unremitting help in identifying members of that institution. A great debt is owed to the late Mr William Cowper, of Kingston, Jamaica, who, from a life-time spent in the West Indies, was able to augment to a marked degree the published records of that area. The after-careers of numerous Indian students, who first appeared at Cambridge in the late nineteenth century, have been most painstakingly checked and expanded by Dr R. P. Paranjpye, himself a Senior Wrangler and Fellow of St John's College, who recently retired from the Vice-Chancellorship of Lucknow University. Mr Leonard Whibley, Fellow of Pembroke, has freely placed his unrivalled knowledge of the late eighteenth century and of its notabilities at the compiler's service, and another Fellow of that College, Mr S. C. Roberts, the busy Secretary of the University Press, has found time not only to give much helpful advice but also to supply notes relating to particular entries. Mr R. M. Glencross has most unselfishly provided a mass of otherwise inaccessible data relating to ordinations in the diocese of London. Sir Wasey Sterry, C.B.E., has generously given the Alumni the results of his lengthy investigations into the biographies of old Etonians, the bulk of which will eventually appear as addenda to Part I. The Rev. Canon E. H. Fellowes, Mus.Doc., of Windsor Castle, Mr G. B. Routledge, Mr L. G. H. Horton-Smith, Mr H. Guy Harrison, Mr J. Saltmarsh, F.S.A., Fellow of King's, and a host of other kind persons have facilitated enquiries in regard to particular places, families or institutions.

The biographical collections of the late Master of St John's, Sir Robert F. Scott, recently made available by the great kindness of the Council of that College, represent the largest and most valuable assemblage of unpublished material to be drawn upon during the many years of preparation. While separate acknowledgement has been made in each entry thus augmented, this occasion must be seized to thank most warmly Mr F. Puryer White, Fellow of the College, who has personally helped by every means at his disposal the full utilisation of this outstandingly important collection of University biographies.

The University Librarian, Mr A. F. Scholfield, has on numerous occasions accorded most welcome facilities to members of the Alumni staff, and, in September 1939, himself superintended the reception and accommodation of its vital card-catalogue within the comparatively safe shelter of the Library. Although all its staff have on every occasion maintained their traditional courtesy, to Mr H. L. Pink in particular is due an expression of gratitude for numerous personal acts of kindness and much helpful advice.

Members of the clerical staffs of the University Registry and of every College office have, frequently at great sacrifice of their time, assisted in the elucidation of innumerable problems; to Mr J. M. Eyles, of the first-named department, in succession to the Rev. F. d'A. Ranner, has fallen the very responsible task of checking all matriculations and degrees and of adding honours.

For the second time, thanks should be accorded to the Governing Bodies of all the Colleges and to the Non-Collegiate Students Board for permission, granted in some cases as long ago as 1908, to transcribe their published and unpublished admission and other registers. All the Bursars and officials concerned have been most helpful, but the name of Mr R. Gardner, Fellow and Bursar of Emmanuel, must in particular be singled out, for, following the example of his predecessor, the late Mr J. B. Peace, he has added every form of personal assistance.

Several hundred previously unknown correspondents answered an appeal, made through the press, to old Cambridge men to furnish details of their post-University careers; all thereby earned the gratitude of the Alumni staff, as have innumerable other persons who have interested themselves in the work for many years past.

To Miss Pate's well-known Cambridge typewriting office has fallen the penultimate, and truly gigantic, task of converting from cards into typescript the 140,000 entries contained in the whole work. The millions of frequently abbreviated, but rigidly standardised, words and expressions used have demanded in their handling great concentration combined with an extraordinarily high level of accuracy, the undeviating maintenance of which on the part of Miss M. Robinson, Miss D. Smith and Mrs Benstead is all the more commendable by reason of the rarely relieved monotony of the work.

* * * * *

The self-appointed task nears its end, but any personal feelings of relief and pleasure are overshadowed by the renewal of war, into whose maëlstrom are now being drawn the sons of those whose corresponding service twenty-five years ago can be followed in these pages. Yet, as may be seen therein, the Horsemen of the Apocalypse have rarely ceased from launching their attacks against the youth of the nation. In Part I are to be found records of those who fell at Flodden, in the Low Countries, in the Civil War, and in every major campaign throughout Europe. Their counterparts of the second series left their bones in the Peninsula, at Waterloo, at Sebastopol, and on the ramparts of Delhi; they went prematurely from Cambridge to fight in South Africa, and they fell in their thousands, in Flanders as ever, in France and at Jutland. Byron's altruistic gesture to Greece was not unique, for many another Cambridge man laid down his life in out-of-the-way parts of the world for ideals of liberty. Plague, times innumerable, drove alike from their studies senior and junior members to temporary refuge in adjacent village or farmstead, on occasion deflecting for a year or so to the sister University the refreshing stream of new students. The graves of two Royal princes who thus perished are to be seen in the churchyard at Buckden in Huntingdonshire, and every parish church and college chapel in Cambridge contains the memorials of countless lesser victims cut off in their promise and hurriedly interred by night. Youth has ever been wont to intervene in constitutional and social uprisings, so it is not surprising to find Cambridge men associated with every such occasion in history, from the "North versus South" riots of 1261 and the generation-later conflict with the Crown over the latter's alleged exclusive rights in the Warren of Cambridge. Our alumni have left their names upon the Martyrs' Memorial at Oxford, the "Cambridge Seven" cheerfully accepted life-long assaults from the third Horseman in China; others, past numbering, have suffered, for a similar cause, hunger and pain, and frequently death itself, in Central Africa, in the unexplored regions of Australia and in all those parts of the world where nature is most inhospitable and mankind most intractable. Others, pitting themselves against nature herself, have nobly perished by the South Pole, on the highest slopes of Everest and in the depths of tropical seas, have failed to return from the hidden places of Arabia or have found a living death in the land of Barbary pirates.

If Part I produced a magician for the Czar of Russia and the inventor of Dover's powder, Part II records the first successful use of weed-killer by a wife-murderer, death in a diving-bell in the South Pacific, the advent to Cambridge of Captain Cook's son, and achievements in sea and aerial navigation associated respectively with the names of Berthon and Bacon. So, metaphorically, pass before our eyes, not merely those "leaders of the people", who, "by their counsels and by their knowledge of learning.....have left a name behind them", or the "rich men furnished with ability", but also that host of "ordinary men", of whom it might have been said that they "have no memorial". For it can now be claimed that, contrary to Sir Thomas Browne's gloomy dictum, the overwhelming majority of Cambridge lives will be found in "the record of man".

This outward procession of alumni "from the earliest times to 1900" forms, indeed, a microcosm of the country itself. Numerically, its largest element is composed of the tens of thousands of beneficed clergy, in many cases son succeeding father for generation after generation. Next in order of magnitude follow those whose ultimate pursuit was the law, their immediate aim entry to some Inn of Court. Medical practitioners come third, before that wonderful collection of schoolmasters, civil servants, engineers, bankers and business men, writers and poets, whose lives and actions, successes and failures, must have been greatly determined by the influences brought to bear upon them within these sheltered walls.

That movement from the University, year in, year out, necessarily had its counterpart in the similar convergence upon Cambridge which had commenced at some unrecorded period of the thirteenth century or even earlier still. This flood achieved its greatest momentum at the Renaissance and again just before the Civil War, slowing perceptibly thereafter until, during the second half of the eighteenth century, it was reduced to a mere fraction of what it had been in Elizabethan times. The Peace of 1815, when those who had won their spurs in battle donned the student's gown, gave it fresh impetus; and the Victorian era, by abolishing mediaeval restraints on freedom of belief and recognising the place of "Science" in the curriculum, caused it, by the "nineties", to overflow its banks as never before.

The constitution, as well as the strength, of this stream frequently changed, for the monkish students of Canon Law gave place to those who sought knowledge of the Civil code, while the Reformation induced an influx of potential parish clergy, although more than three hundred years were to pass before Roman Catholics, non-Conformists, Jews and agnostics could reside on terms of equality with those who recognised the established faith. In the third quarter of the nineteenth century there was added a thin trickle of Indian, and later, of Oriental, students—following in the steps of those who in bygone times had been attracted from the seminaries of Holland, Italy or Spain—a class, some portions of which were shortly to receive recognition, in the first instance as "Advanced", and, subsequently, as "Research Students". At that time, too, the Non-Collegiate system was established in an attempt to widen, on lines reminiscent of those opportunities available to "poor students" of earlier ages, the approaches to Cambridge—a policy which was eventually to be augmented by the provision of State Scholarships and other more direct forms of assistance.

In the old times this ever-moving procession was of a more heterogeneous character. There, side by side with the nobleman's son, assured, after a few terms' idle residence, of his Master's degree without any formality save that of payment, walked the humble Sizar, trusting that intensive study combined with menial service would enable him to complete his course. Beside them might be seen a group of Fellow-Commoners, magnificent in gold-laced gowns, whose passage to the legal profession or to the life of a country gentleman lay securely in front of them. The average age may, at times, have been as high as fifteen years, for, until well on in the seventeenth century, many came into residence as mere children; the youngest on record entered college at seven! Some of these boys had been taught at schools that are still famous, but countless numbers of them were products of successful grammar schools destined later to sink back into oblivion. Contemporaries of Shakespeare, in possession of amply sufficient Latin and, doubtless, some Greek, came from Stratford-on-Avon, and the little village school of Eaton Socon, Huntingdonshire, was frequently mistaken by College authorities for a very different foundation on the banks of the Thames. According to their means and station they came hither on foot or on horseback and, as to provenance, some, venturing into what must have seemed a foreign land, had left behind them the mountains of Wales, others, speaking with an equally strange accent and perhaps with Greek Testament in pocket, trudged south from Aberdeenshire to be joined on the way by groups of young dalesmen from the Fells and of yeomen's sons from the Midlands. The white chalk of Kent was mingled with the red soil of Devon as the throng crossed the threshold of their chosen colleges. Some went naturally to that at which for five, six, or seven generations their forbears had been welcomed, some to one which by reason of their birthplace could offer the financial help of a close scholarship; many were commended by schoolmaster or parson to contemporaries, now tutors or deans; others chose blindly. Whilst the majority stayed for at least four years, the fortunate colleger of Eton, certain of a Fellowship at King's and confronted by no University examination, could look forward to the easy existence of a Don for the rest of his life; a small, but unstable proportion throughout the ages found academic requirements too great a strain on intellect or purse and, together with a still smaller number for whom any corporate life proved impossibly irksome, perforce withdrew. Assuredly there were amongst them saints—some thereafter to be canonised by their Church, others already recognised as such by those around them —and equally certain it is that there were sinners also. These men passed out from court and grove, if not always with distinction, yet in possession of something which was to sustain them throughout the length of their days—a feeling of gratitude and affection for University and College. Apart from a small minority of those whose names appear in these last volumes, all have crossed the river of death.

No man can state when the procession began to move, certainly none can say when or how it will come to an end. It has been a happy privilege during these many years to discover and to describe the lives of its individual members. Doubtless, generations hence, some other grateful son of Cambridge will unfold, in a third series, the ever-growing roll of alumni Cantabrigienses.

Matric. Michs. 1778; Scholar; B.A. 1782. Remarkable for his wit and social qualities; lived extravagantly; famous for the splendour of his entertainments. According to Gunning, commenced a career of dissipation and 'neglected everything a man is sent to the University to learn.' Prosecuted by the University for an assault on James Wood, M.A., Fellow of St John's (afterwards Master) and fined £100 by the Court of King's Bench, Nov. 27, 1788. Popularly known as 'Tom Adkin.' Intimate with Lord Grey, Whitbread, Lambton and others of that party. On leaving Corpus took a suite of apartments at the White Bear Inn, opposite Trinity College, and which became known as 'Adkin College'; here he entertained lavishly: 'his dinners were frequent and generally riotous.' Finally, having exhausted his resources, he was offered a home in the house of his friend Samuel Whitbread (the politician) and remained there several years. Afterwards spent much of his time with Sir George Leeds at Croxton Park, Cambs. But his tendency to drink increased and 'he gradually became insensible to everything else.' (Cooper, Annals, IV. 432; Gunning, I. 51.)
